

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, accused by Jimmy Carter during the presidential campaign of a running U.S. foreign policy as a 'Lone Ranger,' is visiting the president-elect in his tiny home town to brief him on international relations.

Carter's meeting today with Kissinger was part of a series of discussions Carter is conducting with top Ford administration officials in his preparations for the presidency.

On Friday Carter spent nearly six hours in a briefing on national security matters with George Bush, director of the CIA.

Vice President-elect Walter F. Mondale was also in Plains to attend the meetings with Bush and Kissinger.

Carter and Kissinger met 'once before in 1974 when Carter, then governor of Georgia, attended a meeting of the Organization of American States in Atlanta, said Carter press secretary Jody Powell.

At that time Carter was impressed by Kissinger, Powell said.

But during his campaign, Carter criticized what he called the ''secretive'' and ''amoral'' foreign policies of the Ford administration. Carter said that instead of letting foreign affairs be dominated by a "Lone Ranger' pursuing a "'one-man policy of international adventure,' he favored ''frequent consultations on many levels" among democratic nations.

The President-elect plans to make his first post-election trip to Washington Sunday night and confer with President Ford in the White House on Monday.

Bush emerged from the lengthy talks in Carter's home and said Carter showed a keen interest'' on national security matters.

Powell revealed Friday the President-elect received a two-page letter of congratulations last week from former President Richard M. Nixon.

Powell announced Friday the names of 11 persons who will advise Carter and Mondale on key personnel matters.

They are: The Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president, Notre Dame University; Lucy W. Benson, former president, League of Women Voters; Lane Kirkland, secretary-treasurer, AFL-CIO; Vernon Jordan, executive director, Urban League; Carol Foreman, executive director, Consumers Federation of America; Marian Wright Edelman, executive director, Children's Defense Fund.

Robert Strauss, chairman, Democratic National Committee:

Hank Lacayo, chairman, Carter-Mondale campaign Hispanic Advisory Committee; Owen Cooper, former president, Southern Baptist Convention, and past president, Mississippi Chemical Co., Irving Shapiro, chairman, FE. 1. DuPont de Nemours and Co.; and, Patricia Harris, dean of the Howard Law School.
